Greetings!

Happy Summer!

Mere Mortals is in full swing and we hope you are learning a lot about this great sport. We continue to try and make each session as close to the real thing which is why we've added the roped-off transition area and cut-off time. You will experience a similar set up at the Santa Rosa Island Tri and we will continue to adjust each session as necessary.

While you're training, make sure to take advantage of all the knowledge around you. Many of the TGC volunteers and participants have completed several races and are happy to share their suggestions with you. You can learn as much from these conversations as you can from the actual workouts.

Also, as you prepare for the big race in October, make sure you continue your training throughout the week. Sundays are designed to be the backbone of your preparation but you certainly need to be training Monday through Friday. We offer the Thursday morning I Hate Open Water Swims sponsored by Joe Zarzaur Law and led by MPI's own John Murray. If you need other tips, find me or another board member and we can help you out. Generally speaking, you should be practicing each discipline twice a week.

Things to look forward to... The first-ever TGC "Beach Day" will be held after the Mere Mortals session on July 16th. Gear Swap and Summer BBQ will be on August 13th. And finally, the 2017 Sea Turtle Youth Triathlon will be held on October 8. As always, please feel free to contact us with any comments or suggestions at www.trigulfcoast.org or on our Facebook page. Be safe and have fun.

When I first started coaching a Masters-based triathlon swimming group I was hesitant to spend much training time on competitive pool swimming skills, such as flip turns, etc. My thinking was that triathletes that did not come from a competitive swimming background had their plates full with just learning the correct technique of efficient freestyle. Over the years, I have slowly changed that idea. For a couple different reasons, it now makes sense to me to get swimmers to have fast turns, great push-offs, breakouts and finishes. Also, learning the other strokes can help swimmers improve their freestyle.

For my newer swimmers or those who are in need of significant stroke modifications, I delay spending too much time on the pool stuff and stick to the "low hanging fruit" of better balance or improved "catch". But eventually my swimmers will hear those corrections being called out..."Swim all the way to the wall!!", etc.

One reason to hone our pool-swimming craft is that triathletes are inherently competitive. Whether the rival is the clock or the swimmer in the next lane. Learning how to use the wall in your favor can drop a second or more from each length of the pool. Push off about 2 feet underwater to avoid the turbulence on the surface. Push-offs should be explosive and "snappy". Think of a box jump. We are traveling our fastest when leaving the wall so a tight streamline is essential. Squeeze your arms together and "stack" your hands. Your upper arms will be squeezing your head just behind your ears. As you explode off the wall, point your toes and glide until you just start to slow down. The freestyle breakout starts with the first arm pull. If you are slightly on your side, the lower arm pulls first. Also, you are a bit too deep, that first pull can propel you not only forward but up toward the surface. Practice good push-offs and breakouts on EVERY turn!

Flip -turns are fun to do and can save time. I encourage swimmers to begin to learn this skill. However, while they are still deliberating whether or not to try the flip turn, I will help them learn a better open turn. A very well executed open turn can rival or beat a less-than-stellar flip turn. Swim hard into the wall and only touch the wall/gutter for a brief split second..push off as above.

Learning other strokes can be fun but may take away time from needed improvements in freestyle. Butterfly and breaststroke are short-axis strokes and can be tough on the shoulders(butterfly) and knees(breaststroke). However, backstroke is a long axis stroke and can help improve a swimmer's freestyle. Attributes like balance and body rotation can translate directly to freestyle. Also, mixing up your strokes can be a monotony breaker.

So, in the future, when you are swimming next to someone that is always beating you by a second or two, consider some faster pool techniques and see if you can edge them out!

Art of Sheltering in Place

There was a time in my life when my idea of relaxing involved a couch. Through the prodding of my wife and newfound friends in the triathlon community, that idea has slowly morphed into the appreciation of "the OUTSIDE." Like many we prefer to run on the road or trail, bike anywhere BUT on a trainer and swim in open water. While all these activities have inherent risk, the most unpredictable is Mother Nature. Nature is a fickle mistress.

One morning, we decided we wanted to ride from Casino Beach to Navarre. It's a common route with some sand and wind, a few cars, and the beautiful Gulf. As we unloaded our bikes, we could see a storm system on the horizon. We pushed on and started our ride. As we headed East we could see the system coming closer to shore. It was darker. We pedaled faster. The tailwind was nice. The sky was bright as we approached Navarre beach and made our right turn toward the pier. Then we noticed the BLACK that was behind us. No sooner had we pulled under a pavilion by the bathrooms, the clouds caught up with us and unloaded with buckets of rain, howling wind, lightning, and thunder. And there we sat for two hours.

We had some food and water. We were safe, visible, comfortable, prepared, and patient. So we sheltered in place until we felt we could safely trek back to Pensacola Beach. There is an art to surviving "the OUTSIDE." Mostly it involves some planning before-hand and staying calm in the moment. As your cycling distances increase, these are the things you should be thinking about prior to a ride.

- For this (10, 15, 25, 55, 100 mile) bicycle ride, what is my route?
- How long should it take?
- How much nutrition do I need?
- Where will I refill my water or get additional hydration?
- Is my cell phone charged? Will the battery last the entire ride? What are my charging options?
- What is my emergency plan?
- What is my weather plan?
- What additional supplies would I need if I have to pause for weather?
- Who is my emergency contact? Have I told them my route, timeline, etc.?
- Do I have flat tire changing tools and tubes?
- Can I change my own tire and/or make simple roadside repairs?
- Who is riding with me?
- Am I visible to motorists (clothing/lights)?

These same concepts are applicable for swimming, running, biking, or ANY outdoor activity.

For the purposes of Tri Gulf Coast and Mere Mortals, we strongly recommend everyone be able to identify when it is necessary to shelter in place (LIGHTING). While we monitor the weather and conditions closely, it is impossible to plan for EVERY contingency in EVERY situation. It's Florida and our weather can change fast. Know your limitations, know the area, and be able to stay calm. In any situation that involves a serious injury, the first step is to call 9-1-1.

As you leave our Mere Mortals Transition area on the bike, at a minimum have:

- Helmet
- Your cell phone and a TGC contact phone number (check the dryboard)
- Spare tube and inflator
- Hydration
- If GOING LONG, inform Registration Volunteers, they have a list and be aware of the cut-off time for the morning workout.

Remember, it takes some really horrendous weather for ANY race to be cancelled completely. It's important to train in as many of these conditions as safely possible. Know how to stay safe and enjoy rain, wind, sand, heat, cold, etc.
